Rebooting Chaos

By Guest Write-In

USA, America-- With the positive thrust to the new year, people now start to question their life choices. They know they need to do better, but how? The biggest question asked by the stereotypical teenager is, “What show will I binge watch next? ” Facing a constant pressure to meet the ongoing demand for more content, Netflix has nearly exhausted every fresh idea. They only have one option left watch remakes of some favorite movies with a female protagonist.

For many major studios this has been a go to move. For example, Ocean’s 11 was remade to be Ocean’s 8; they did this to prove that women are better than men by three. Netflix, now following this pattern, will remake some of their originals. The first to follow this pattern will be “Stranger Things”, but for copyright reasons, the show will be named, “Strangette Things”.
The next series to be rebooted is “Comedians in Cars Getting Coffee”. Jerry Seinfeld is to be replaced by Leslie Jones and the show will be renamed “Comedian in Car” because Leslie Jones is more than enough.

This pattern has seemed to continue into other film companies. Here is the list our IT department was able to dig up:
- Mad Maxine
- 12 Angry Women
- The Lion Queen
- Saving Private Ryann
- The Godmother
- Lauren of Arabia
- Good Wilma Hunting
- Jaquelyn and Jill
- The Witch of Oz

The general audience does not approve of this idea. Within time, shows as popular as the Office will be rebooted. In response, fans only know to do one thing: send faxes saying, “NOO, PLEASE, NO, GOD, NO”

Teachers Prepare for Starner’s State of the High School Address

Chris P. Bill and Jefferson Steelflex

LIBERTY, Olentangy-- Tuesday night, President Donald Trump live streamed to viewers across the nation in order to address the events of the last year in politics, and to discuss his future goals for the nation. Supreme Leader Starner has decided to follow suit, as he viewed the address as a great format to do a new type of Patriot Period. Like Trump, Starner will also use the opportunity to spread the message of the new party that he has created to support his educational messages, the “GOP” (Goofy Ol’ Patriots).

Starner has informed members of the press of some of the topics that he would like to address in his speech. One important topic that will be touched on include the schools ongoing war on hygiene that is currently being waged in the men’s bathroom in the commons. A point of emphasis for the administration has been pulling the school's soap out of the war zone. He also would like to discuss the influx in use of illegal parking spots in the “Sophomore Lot.” The last major topic he plans to address is the future of Patriot Periods. Starner plans to rework patriot period so it takes place once a month on a homebase after second period. The brave new format will also cover various character traits in order to make the students better people as well. Banners are expected to be created.

Typically, these types of speeches drag on for as long as possible while giving the spectators a well-rounded workout due to the everlasting standing up and clapping. Starner intended to do the very same thing in his own address, but wanted to provide the teachers with a workout routine to prepare them for the upcoming speech. The workout plan is listed below:

- Using a chair, stand up and sit down; 10 sets of 60
- Using two separate hands, bring them together in a rapid fashion; 41 sets of 2 minutes
- When finished resting, perform the first two workouts synonymously in order to maximize sovereignty
- Using a mirror, chant “U.S.A.” rhythmically

Patriots obtain Sweet Victory in Super Bowl LIII

By Tyrone Tuggles and Seymore Bhutts

ATLANTA, Georgia-- Super Bowl LIII revealed much attraction this year as fans were enthralled with an exciting shootout ending in a final score of 13-3. As system QB Tom Shady and his master Bill Belicheat led the Patriots to victory, we recorded a short podcast of some of our hot takes and in-game analysis:

Tuggles: And we are off! The start of Super Bowl 53! You excited Bhutts?
Bhutts: Of course! It's the largest sporting event of all time.
Tuggles: Predictions of the final score?
Bhutts: These are two high powered offenses, probably hundreds of points scored tonight.
Tuggles: I agree, can't wait to see all the touchdowns!
20 minutes pass of absolute silence
Tuggles: You awake there Seymore?
Bhutts: Zzzzzz
Tuggles: And the field goal is good!
Bhutts: Snores a little
Tuggles: Welp, wish I could sleep too, but I'm waiting for the halftime show!
Bhutts: Zzzzzzzzzzzzzz
Tuggles: Ohhh Adam Levine took his shirt off!
Bhutts:shoots awake D*ng he is good looking.
Tuggles: I know you're enjoying the show now, but just wait until Tom Brady kisses his son (on the lips)!
Bhutts: I agree Tyrone, I heard that is the key to being so good, maybe Goff should try it to get back in the game.
Tuggles: Maybe those sparks could spark the Rams offense.
Bhutts: I'm afraid a comeback is impossible now, they are down by three points!
Another hour of complete silence passes
Tuggles: I think we had ourselves a ball game here, so much back and forth!
Bhutts: Those punts looked really sharp, Tyrone. I think that was the key to the Patriots' success.
Tuggles: It really was Seymore. I'm Tyrone Tuggles, and you can catch us next time at… at…yawns... at...zzzzzzzz

On February 12, 1993 the movie of a lifetime came out: Groundhog Day starring Bill Murray. The main premise of the movie involves Murray's character, Phil, waking up every morning on Groundhog Day. This movie was very good but often subject to parody. Zero out of Ten.

Dear LonelyBoy33,
Many of the writers at the Trebuchet are also single and have no hope, so we have already made plans to meet at someone's house and watch The Notebook/La La Land several times while eating Ben and Jerry's by the gallon. Stay single.
